Main Street to close for Golden Helmets

Plans to close a section of Highland Street for part of the Colourfest festivities on Oct. 1 were approved by council on

The request came during a delegation from the Haliburton Business Improvement Area, in conjunction with Community Care, who asked that council consider closing the street during the organization's Colourfest event. The closure is being requested in order to accommodate a performance of the OPP Golden Helmets between 11 a.m. and 12:15 p.m.

BIA administrator Jim Frost outlined the organization's plans to council while distributing maps highlighting alternate routes to get around town.

"Are stores in favour of it?" asked Ward 2 Councillor Dennis Casey.

'The majority of stores have been canvassed and are in favour," said BIA executive member Andy Glecoff.

"Let's face it, the OPP are a huge draw. We could have 3,000 to 4,000 people there. We don't know," Frost said.

According to the BIA, the performance will run from the Photo Shop at 192 Highland St. east to the LCBO parking

The delegation was presented to council for approval so that the BIA could confirm the performance with organizers from the Golden Helmets, Glecoff told the paper.

"They had to have an answer as to whether or not we had council support," he said.

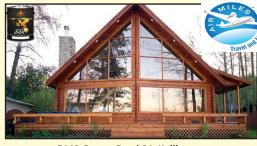

At the time of the delegation, not all stores along the main street had been contacted regarding the closure,

Mental health patients choosing the phone

Jenn Watt

Editor

Last year, there were more phone calls than face-to-face visits with the county's mental health services.

Haliburton Highlands Health Services CEO Paul Rosebush presented the board with statistics on May 26 that showed the new communication trend.

"I think that speaks to the nature of our community that we serve. Not all the clients can get in for appointments due to transport issues and distance," Rosebush said.

Year-end statistics for the board show that telephone consultations have increased to 2,278 in 2010/11.

In 2009/10, that number was 1,684.

It is also possible that financial difficulties led people to stay at home rather than spend money on gas getting to the mental health facility in Minden.

"[The increase] may be a reflection on the economy too," Rosebush said.

While there was an increase in phone calls, there was also a slight decrease in face-to-face visits, he said.

There were 3,216 visits last year versus 3,258 the year

Overall, these numbers put mental health staff at capacity, with an increase of 552 sessions in the last year.

The demand, overall, in mental health continues to increase, but the nice thing is that they're still maintaining their zero wait list," Rosebush said.

Mental health services now has 572 clients.

Majority support closure, BIA says

however the BIA had the support of the larger ones, Glecoff said.

"This closure is no different than any other closure we do for parades or Midnight Madness," he said.

"There was not time to canvass everyone, but everybody is being informed."

According to Glecoff, an email will be sent to all downtown businesses informing them of the closure.

Janet Sheehey of JanKnit's Studio, on Highland Street, said she was not contacted about the closure prior to the council meeting, but remains positive about the planned performance.

"I'm not against the closure because this was our choice," said Sheehey, who claimed original plans for the event saw the performance was originally scheduled in front of the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School.

"I still believe people should be told or asked," said Sheehev.

According to Thom Lambert, executive of the Haliburton County Studio Tour, tour members were not contacted regarding the street closure, either.

An artist on the tour for the past seven years, Lambert personally questions the decision to close part of the street.

"I don't understand how closing the main street and posting no parking signs is in keeping with the goal of the weekend, which is to attract business to the area," he said.

The main street of Haliburton is essential to the success of the tour, said Lambert. $\,$

Parking will also be prohibited on Highland Street during the event from 9 a.m. to $12:30~\rm p.m.$ to accommodate the performance.

Residents will be made aware of the parking changes prior to the event through public service announcements in local media.

Tow trucks will be on hand during the day to remove vehicles parked in restricted areas, said the BIA.

With the Haliburton Highlands OPP detachment on board for traffic control, the BIA would also appreciate the assistance of the municipal roads department in the placement of traffic barriers, said Frost.

Council authorized the closure subject to specifics.

Happy (belated) Earth Day

Angelica Blenich

Staff reporter

It's never too late to celebrate the earth.

That was the message students at Wilberforce Elementary School received on June 7 when the school hosted the official Haliburton County Earth Day festivities.

Originally scheduled to take place on April 20, the event had to be postponed due to snowy road conditions.

Various speakers visited the school to talk about the importance of the earth and the role kids can play in helping to preserve it.

Hosted by Carol Kilby from the Gaia Centre, the afternoon included eco-trivia, a visit from Treeific and The Green Man and tips on how everyone can cut back on electricity. Sheila Ziman outlined many of the species at risk in Haliburton County and offered advice on how to help protect these animals.

"Never pick up an animal and move it somewhere else," said Ziman, chairperson of the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust.

Susanne Lauten, federal Green Party candidate for riding shared a story about a young boy in Africa who made a difference by bringing wind turbine energy to his village in Malawi.

"If you ever think you're too young to make a difference, just think about this young man and what he was able to do," said Lauten.

Highlands East Deputy-reeve Suzanne Partridge capped off the afternoon by thanking all those who participated and encouraged students to continue to take care of the earth.

"It was a great afternoon, the students had excellent ideas about what they could do to conserve energy and protect species at risk," said presenter Sheryl Loucks in a press release.

Following the visit to the school, the presenters headed down to the Highlands East municipal office where they raised the Earth Day flag.

Next year the festival will move to Algonquin Highlands.

Rare crystal to be used for Highlands East chain of office

Angelica Blenich Staff reporter

The following are brief reports of items discussed at the June 7 meeting of Highlands East council.

A rare mineral known as fluorrichterite crystal will be the focal point of the new municipal chain of office to be designed and made by local artist Tracey Lee Green.

According to Green, the mineral is only found in three places in the world, with the largest deposit located in Wilberforce.

Green approached council during a delegation about using the crystal in the traditional chain, to be completed over the course of this summer.

"The biggest deposit is found here on the George Earle farm on Essonville Line. That was one of the main reasons I recommended using it," Green said.

The minerals are diamond shaped and are grown inside calcite, a soft mineral she said.

Green passed around samples of the mineral for council to see. Other minerals were also available to use, however, the fluorrichterite was uncommon and unique, she said.

Fluorrorichterite is translucent grey to black in colour. Council authorized Green to use the rare mineral and approved her quote of $1,305.50 to complete the project.

Developer volunteers services to upgrade feral cat colony

Minden-based builder Abby Xerri has approached Ward 1 councillor Steve Kauffeldt about the possibility of improving the feral cat colony in Highlands East.

Kauffeldt presented a letter from Xerri to council outlining suggested installations he would like to see completed at the building.

According to the letter, Xerri met with Kauffeldt and Maryanne Leach, senior volunteer at the colony, at the site and as a result has offered his services voluntarily.

The biggest deposit is found here on the George Earle farm on Essonville Line.

Xerri is proposing the site be outfitted with solar heat/ cooling and power, a roof top water catch, storage supply and temperature controlled ventilation.

He also expressed concerns with the current aspects of the building including food storage and maintenance of storage containers.

Kauffeldt told council Xerri is willing to donate both his time and materials to the project.

Cardiff pool construction continues, cost of swimming lessons stay put Construction at the Cardiff swimming pool continues to paddle on as council approved a $27,500 tender to complete the concrete deck surrounding the pool.

The contract was awarded to Sam Cook, who has guaranteed the project will be completed by July 1, said environment supervisor Glen Covert.

Covert mentioned the possibility of raising the price of swimming lessons offered at the pool this summer.

The current fees have stayed at a set rate for a significant time period and are lower than lessons offered in Bancroft, Covert said.

Council decided to keep the fees at the same rate for this summer and advertise a possible increase next year.

Arena to host recreational activities this summer

The Keith Tallman Memorial arena in Wilberforce will host various activities geared to children this summer.

A proposal from Karen Hutt to run sports activities was approved by council subject to certain changes.

Property supervisor Jim Alden suggested council remove the proposed teen dances from the calendar of activities, as he believed they were better suited to be held at the Lloyd Watson Centre. Council agreed and approved Hutt's proposal to organize basketball and ball hockey games at the arena, as well as a trash and treasures yard sale fundraiser to be held on July 2.

Being asked signals inclusion and respect and when one is missed, it can has to go into party planning - or feel like a slight.

Closing Highland Street for the OPP Golden Helmets motorcycle show at October's Colourfest is an easy sell to most.

The event had a successful debut last year and new money has allowed town's BIA to bring in bigger acts.

But when canvassing the downtown businesses for support, not all were asked.

That simple oversight - of which few of us are innocent - caused some hard feelings.

Similarly, there are some involved with the county's studio tour (which runs the same weekend) who think their opinions should have been incorporated into the plans.

Stats shift

The number of people accessing mental health services in the county is up. And so too are telephone consultations.

They're so far up, in fact, that there were more people calling in for help than coming into the office last year.

At the hospital board meeting May 26, CEO Paul Rosebush suggested the increase in calls could be coming from the poor economy.

Our vast geography, coupled with the price of transportation added to the recession may be keeping people from face-to-face consultations.

While it indicates that people are still accessing services, their options are limited: not by the services available, but by their means.

It's a theory that, if it proves true, should be troubling to us all.

Fowl news indeed

Steve Galea

OMETIMES, a parent has to deal with bad news.

This happened last week when my 11-year-old daughter Carmen uttered the words no father wants to hear.
"Dad," she said, "I don't think I'm going to be a duck hunter."

"Really?" I muttered, as I pulled the car over and began the grieving process.

She nodded.

"But what about the pact we made?" I stammered.

"I was six months old," she responded.

"Hey, you signed it," I said, producing my copy.

"With my feet and red paint," she mumbled.

"I've got a good lawyer," I replied tersely.

Legal wrangling aside, I could not help but feel that somehow, as a father, I had failed. My little girl, a kid who could blow a duck call at age two and had plucked more birds than most barn cats, had somehow decided that she didn't want to hunt ducks.

We're talking about an activity that gives a person every excuse in the world to get up before the crack of dawn, haul gear and decoys into a small boat, eat a greasy breakfast, drink bad coffee, wade into a stinky marsh, get wet, cold and muddy, and listen to excessive duck calling when most people are wasting time sleeping soundly in a nice warm bed.

And yet she had somehow decided against it. There was only one answer. "Carm," I asked. "Have you had any recent dealings with a cult?"

"No," she said. "It's not that at all. I just don't think I'll be a good enough shot."

'Why would you say that?" I asked. "Well, you've been doing it forever and I've seen you miss all the

I believe the fact that I didn't disown her is testament enough of my love. Still, it was a hurtful thing to say.

Even now, I'm unsure of what to do.

I mean, this and "I'll pass on dessert," are words that no child of mine has ever uttered

Loon Tales before. I'm seriously considering hosting an intervention. We're deep enough into the off-season that I could call upon several of my duck hunting buddies and their retrievers. I figure we could ambush Carm from a blind set up in the living room. We'd probably let her circle a few times and, when she makes the final approach towards the junk food, we'd pop up and let her know how her decision affects us. Then we'd slip that old classic "Whistling Wings II" into the VCR. After that, I'd lighten things up with duck identification games and entertain her with a duck call jam session and an impromptu seminar on decoy placement - you know, just to show her that her dad is cooler than she thought.

Ah, who am I kidding?

My expectations aren't very realistic. I'm asking way too much of her. I mean, how is she ever going to be a good deer hunter, if she spends all of her time in the marsh?

Restorative

were sitting on the back deck taking a break from their multitude of chores. Sally had just said she always felt better about the world and her own life when she sat like this, looking at the glory of nature.

Norm was highly stressed these days. Despite his best efforts, his business was floundering. He had just had to euthanize his old dog, a loss he grieved every hour. His car was lurching along on borrowed time and Sally, the light of his life, had been diagnosed with a possibly terminal illness and would be starting treatment within a few weeks. There was nothing good about life.

As he sat there grumbling into his coffee about the terrible state of everything, Sally reached over. "Norm," she said softly. "Look around us right now."

Sharon Lynch Down our Road

He looked into the face of this calm and gentle woman then past her. They were surrounded by thick green clouds of vegetation. The heavy spring rains had turned their yard into a mini-Ireland, with every shade of green from almost-yellow to near black. Trees and shrubs billowed under the weight of their laden branches and boughs. Wildflowers had begun to emerge in the untouched natural corners of the yard and berry bushes were snowy with blossoms. Birds chirped and fluttered, some seen others not, from all directions and their voices were carried on a vagrant breeze, gently swaying Sally's hammock tucked under two poplars. The blue unblemished sky held not a cloud as far up a speck of a hawk cried down to the earth.

Still it was hard for Norm to accept it all. His worries and sadness circled like a storm whose lightning could flash out at any time, unpredictably. The thunder rolled in and out of his head, rumbling and pushing away everything else in its way.

"I'm going to buy some groceries and leave you to put up the gazebo," Sally finally said with a sigh. She could see Norm was still preoccupied with his anger and pessimism. She planted a kiss on his cheek and headed for the house. After he heard the car leave, Norm headed for the shed where he stored the detachable parts of the screened gazebo that stood in the middle of their backyard. The metal frame stayed up year round. Norm disliked the task of putting the rest of it together. The bugs were out now making it even more unpleasant for Norm. He climbed up and down the ladder numerous times while trying to pull the canopy around and through the awkward metal shape. Just when he thought he was making headway he realized it was inside out and he had to start over. Anger like heat rose from his stomach but he tried to ignore it.

With the canopy roof finally in place, he began working on the side screens. He had been concentrating so hard on what he was doing that he hadn't seen the deer come into the yard. Deer were always coming around, attracted by the salt lick and the bird feeders.

There were two of them. When Norm happened to look up he found himself staring right into the face of one. It had its neck stretched toward him, head tilted curiously. The only sound was the still vagrant breeze rustling the poplar leaves, a shushing sound in the background.

The deer took a tentative step toward the gazebo as though trying to figure out what was going on inside. Norm realized they probably couldn't make him out behind the screens. To them he might have just been a dark blur moving around. He stayed still and watched them for a while. Incredibly quiet, both deer now came almost to the edge of the screen, peering in at Norm who stood frozen in place. After looking for a few minutes, they lowered their heads to graze then popped up again cautiously curious still. There were remnants of their winter coats and their ears were huge, like wings on either side of their heads. Large dark eyes shining with life took him in. Norm wondered what they were thinking even as he marvelled at their silent, delicate beauty.

There was a bang as Sally's car door slammed. The deer startled sideways and leapt away. Sally rounded the house in time to see their white tails disappear into the bush.

Norm went to meet her and gave her a hug. She looked at him quizzically. "I'm better now," he said and smiled.

Financial Advice with Susan Lee - Certified Financial Planne

TEACHING YOUR CHILDREN ABOUT MONEY

At what age do you start to teach your children about money? I was surfing the internet with this question and was bombarded with information on the topic when I came upon a web site I would not thought of looking at: Office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy Canada (OSB) www.hhpt://osb-bfs.ic.g.ca. They have developed 5 financial guides and 4 activity books a puzzle and a decision game. All to help parents/guardians and teachers teach children about money. The teaching tools were developed because the OBS is dedicated to teaching consumers of all ages about the importance of financial planning and upon reviewing the material I think they have done a very good job of it.

The first guide and activity book cover ages 5 and 6. One of the activities is:

Recognizing different forms of money.

- · Let your child handle real money.
- Discuss the appearance of each coin and bill
- Talk about the material that is used to make money (copper for pennies ect) Bills are made out of 100% cotton but it may be easier for kids to understand if you tell them they are made out of strong paper.
- Explain the value of each coin and bill.
- · Point out the images on either side of the coins or bills.
- Establish the differences between the animals and illustrations on each coin and bill.
- · Compare the weight and size (thickness and diameter) of each coin and bill.
- Discuss the dates and the age of each coin and bill.

There is even an activity on building a piggy bank from recycled

The guides are free and I have some extras at my office available while supplies last for anyone interested.

In my next article I am going to review the next two guides covering ages 7 & 8 and 9 & 12.

Helping you plan for your future, Susan Lee

Sharing lives and stories

Ms. Kennedy and her Grade 2 class from Stuart Baker Elementary School join the residents of Highland Wood every other Thursday morning for a program called Creative Kids. The program gives the children a chance to practise their reading and socialization skills with others, giving the residents some bright new faces and a chance to connect with the children in our community. Ms. Kennedy's students fill the residents' mornings with a variety of short stories and books. Each student is paired with a resident and they read to them one-

Why My Dad Is Special!

 $\ensuremath{\mathrm{My}}$ dad loves me and is always there for me.

Yes is the answer he always gives me.

Doing, he is always doing fun games and stuff with me.

 ${\begin{tabular}{l} \mathbb{A} lways ready for a water fight. \end{tabular}}$

Dad is an important role in my life and plays it perfectly.

It's too bad some people don't have a dad.

Special not enough to describe him, he is so much more than that.

Speaks with a great cartoon voice that makes me laugh.

 $\mbox{\bf P}\mbox{\bf eople},$ my dad is also special to the world not just me.

Eating with him is always good. He is a great cook.

Caring and kind he is just that. He also tells funny bedtime stories.

And I think he just couldn't get any better.

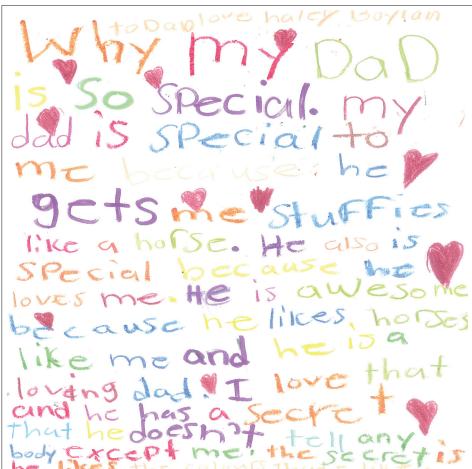

It must be a great honour to be a dad.

PALS track meet brings fun for student athletes

Editor

You could hear peals of laughter through the booming pop music on the field of Haliburton high school Thursday, as students from the PALS (Practical Academic Life Skills) program competed in the sixth annual track meet.

Students from across Trillium Lakelands District School Board marched proudly in a parade around the school's track, carrying banners and waving to the crowd, which was comprised of family, community members and students from the high school, who were allowed out for the opening ceremonies.

'[The athletes] write a lot of letters thanking us," Bruce Griffith, special education department head at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School said, "and it's great for our community to see what it's all about."

The event is all about fun for the students, who each take home a medal after a day full of physical activity and fel-

Dozens of volunteer high school students helped throughout the day, dressed in bright red T-shirts, giving out ribbons, directing onlookers and setting up for events.

The PALS track meet originated from a program enhancement fund grant to the school, with money going to shirts, equipment and busing.

About $2,500 comes from the grant and $500 comes from the Haliburton Legion, which is used to purchase the med-

Protecting our bass

Spring is here. Black flies are in the air. And in the shallow reaches of your lake, male smallmouth bass are probably guarding their nests. If that's the case, leave them alone. Fish for rock bass, walleye, muskie, pike or trout or whatever else is open. Just leave them alone.

Legally, it's simple: the season doesn't open until the fourth Saturday in June - a date chosen to protect spawning bass from anglers.

And for good reason. They're ridiculously easy to catch while on the nest. But doing so just might wipe out their spawning efforts for the year, something that will eventually impact their numbers on your lake.

Smallmouth spawn over six to 10 days in late spring and early summer, any time from late May to early July, when water temperatures reach a range of 12.8- to 20-degrees Cel-

The males choose the site and scour out a basin, one to six feet in diameter on sandy, gravel-strewn or rocky bottoms. These nests are typically in less than four feet of water, but can be found as deep as 20 feet.

They're often situated beside rocks, logs or vegetation - anything, it seems, that might make the place more defensible or act as a marker. Some males return the same nests annually; almost all return to within 150 yards of previous spawning sites, if conditions

After the nest is built, you might observe rubbing, nipping and other spawning behaviours. This precludes mating, which is an annual act that takes place in five-second spurts over the course of two hours or so. The female deposits eggs and the male fertilizes.

The larger the female, the more eggs approximately 7,000 per pound of female, in fact. This fact supports releasing big fish throughout the season.

Between 5,000 to 14,000 light amber to pale yellow eggs are dropped. These attach to clean stones in the nest.

Even so, 40 per cent of nests fail. Fluctuations in water temperature and level, predation from aquatic and terrestrial species, fungal infections and angler impact are the main reasons.

Luckily, females often spawn multiple times with other mates.

The male's focus remains, however, on protecting his nest and its contents from predators such as rock bass. He fans the eggs with his tail to keep them free of silt, and therefore viable, and protects the fry after they hatch.

Steer clear of bass nesting sites and you can help preserve our lakes' bass for when the season opens at the end of June.

Studies suggest that the larger the male, the greater the chance of the nesting success. Four to 10 days after spawning, the eggs hatch. Within 12 days the young, who are less than half an inch in size, have absorbed their yolk sac. This allows them to rise off the bottom and feed on zooplankton and other tiny organisms.

Within a week, the new generation leaves the nest. And though the male continues to protect them, panfish and other predators snap them up when they can, often decimating their numbers.

When all is said and done, the new generation is just a fraction of what it initially was.

How can you help? As was noted, don't fish for them on the nest. But Minden-area MNR biologist Gerry Moraal says anglers aren't alone in the potential damage they can cause - swimmers, boaters or anyone working on shoreline should steer clear of nest sites too.

Letting them spawn without disruption means a healthy lake down the road.

Besides, there'll be plenty of time for bass after the last Saturday in June.

Cycle through streets safely this summer

Heather Reid

Special to the Echo

This is the fourth in a series of articles called Shifting Gears on getting your bicycle on the road this summer.

Whether you are commuting, training for a race, or riding recreationally, being safe on the roads is a priority. There are a few simple things to keep in mind that will go a long way towards safe, enjoyable cycling.

1. Ride with confidence

Ride on the right, about one metre from the road edge. When cars approach, hold your line; don't swerve off onto the shoulder. Keeping a straight line makes you more predictable to the traffic wanting to pass you. If you are standing on the pedals while climbing, try to minimize side-to-side movement while the car passes.

2. Think and act like a vehicle

A bicycle is a vehicle under the Ontario Highway Traffic Act. This means that, as a cyclist, you have the same rights and responsibilities to obey all traffic laws as other road users. Acting like a vehicle (signalling, stopping, etc.) also makes it easier for cars to anticipate where you are going so they can adjust to your presence. When turning or moving out into a lane, signal and make eye contact with drivers to ensure they are aware of you.

3. Be visible

Wear bright colours and use lights in low light conditions, white in the front, red in the rear.

4. Wear a helmet

Protect your greatest resource - your

5. Help people to like cyclists

Many motorists are not used to interacting with cyclists on the road. Be an ambassador for cycling. When cars give you lots of room and pass slowly, wave in appreciation. Be safe and courteous and follow the rules of the road. Leaving a good impression with people when you are on your bike can only be a positive thing.

Here is some additional information from the Highway Traffic Act as it pertains to cyclists.

Slow moving traffic - Any vehicle moving slower than the normal traffic speed should drive in the right-hand lane, or as close as practicable to the right edge of the road except when preparing to turn left or when passing another vehicle. For cyclists, you must ride far enough out from the curb to maintain a straight line, clear of sewer grates, debris, potholes, and parked car doors. Usually this is about 1 metre.

Traffic signals and signs - Stop for red lights and stop signs and comply with all

Signalling a turn – Before turning, look behind you and signal your turn. Cyclists can use their right arm to signal a right

Crosswalks - Stop for pedestrians at crosswalks and walk your bike when crossing at a crosswalk.

Stopped school buses - Stop for stopped school buses when the upper alternating red lights are flashing and the stop arm is Lights - A bike must have a white front light and a red rear light or reflector if you ride between half an hour before sunset and a half an hour after sunrise.

Reflective tape - A bike must have white reflective tape on the front forks and red reflective tape on the rear forks.

Bell - A bike must have a bell or horn in good working order.

Brakes - A bike must have at least one brake system on the rear wheel. When you put on the brakes, you should be able to skid on dry, level pavement.

Helmets - Every cyclist under the age of eighteen must wear an approved bicycle helmet. Parents or guardians shall not knowingly permit cyclists under sixteen to ride without a helmet.

Identification - Cyclists must identify themselves when stopped by police for breaking traffic laws. The police officer will ask you for your correct name and address.

Passengers - Passengers are not allowed on a bicycle designed for one person.

Attaching to a vehicle - You are not permitted to attach yourself to the outside of another vehicle or streetcar for the purpose of "hitching a ride".

YWCA to host community forum

What do Haliburton women need to succeed in business?

YWCA Peterborough, Victoria and Haliburton intends to adopt the highly successful Women in Business training program for women, developed and facilitated by YWCA Muskoka and is attempting to tailor the curriculum to fit the unique needs of women in Haliburton County.

In order to best serve women in the county - and ultimately the employers who will benefit from such a program - YWCA invites business owners, employers, social service agency representatives, entrepreneurs, business mentors, life coaches, educators and potential participants to take part in the Women in Business community forum at McKecks in Haliburton on Tuesday, June 21 from 9:30 a.m. to 10:45 a.m. to share ideas, resources and expertise with YWCA.

The purpose of Women in Business is to provide integrated life skills and business/ employment skills training, and is designed to increase confidence, self-esteem, skill levels and personal and professional networks - resulting in greater economic independence for graduates. Participants are supported in completing a life plan and a business plan.

Women in Business is designed to support women at turning points in their lives. Turning points may include changes in marital status, unemployment, returning to the workforce, changing careers, or recently moving to our community.

Coffee, tea, juice and muffins will be provided courtesy of McKecks - The Blue Line. Special guest is Lynda Hutt, Women in Business coordinator, YWCA Muskoka.

Please RSVP to Sarah Adams, community researcher, YWCA Peterborough, Victoria and Haliburton at 705-457-0260 or email sadamsywcahal@bellnet.ca if you would like to participate or find out more information. Research made possible by Haliburton County Development Corporation.

High school students learn value of CPR training

Lisa Gervais

Special to the Echo

Almost 2,000 Grade 9 students from seven high schools in the Trillium Lakelands District School Board will undergo lifesaving CPR and defibrillator training.

The Advanced Coronary Treatment (ACT) Foundation launched a training program for high school students in the City of Kawartha Lakes, Haliburton and Muskoka areas on Friday, June 10.

At one point, the students taught some of the dignitaries how to do CPR and use the public access defibrillator.

Sponsor Sally Elston said the training was an "enormous" gift" to a "fascinating generation of young people trained to go out into the world with an ability to help mankind in times of need and stress."

Kirkpatrick said that in a 31-year paramedic career he may have saved five people through CPR and defibrillation because "we can't get to people fast enough. Time is of the essence. We basically have three minutes to get things happening" when average response times in urban areas are 10 minutes. He said paramedics can only realistically save five per cent of people, which is why this training and having PADs in public buildings is so important.

Some 33 physical education teachers have been trained as CPR and defibrillator instructors for their students. Two hundred mannequins, 40 defibrillator mannequins and 32 defibrillator training units will be donated to schools by the Elston Charitable Foundation; provincial partners the Government of Ontario, The OTF, and Hydro One and health partners: AstraZeneca Canada, Bristol-Myers Squibb Canada, Pfizer Canada and sanofi-aventis.

Don Abel chosen NDP candidate for provincial election

Lisa Gervais

Special to the Echo

The New Democratic Party candidate for Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock is continuing his "active" and "avid" support of a party that first captured him during a high school mock election in the early 1960s.

The NDP was only three years old when Don Abel was first exposed to it and he has been hooked ever since.

On Saturday, June 11 Abel won a first ballot victory over Frank Mizzi and James Mulhern to carry the orange into battle against Liberal incumbent Rick Johnson and PC can-

"Oct. 6 is going to be a perfect opportunity for the people of Ontario, an opportunity to select a government that will shift from a government that ... has taken unfair taxes and allowed unfair corporate tax deductions. We have to shift that to get our economy back on its feet," Abel said in his acceptance speech to about 45 party faithful gathered at the Royal Canadian Legion in Lindsay.

Abel said he is an NDPer because the party believes in a mix of public, private and cooperative economic opportunities, social services, publicly funded health care, education and welfare and the right of people to organize in the workplace and voice their opinions.

He said the 1995 Mike Harris Common Sense Revolution - which after eight years "soured" - was reflected in PC leader Tim Hudak's campaign.

For example, a promise to eliminate the hydro debt retirement charge would cost the treasury $1.2 billion so 'they're buying our votes with our own money. History is repeating itself," he said.

He said the Liberals were elected in 2003 on a promise of no taxes but ushered in eco-fees, OHIP premiums and

He also accused Premier Dalton McGuinty of flip-flopping on everything from mixed martial arts to online gambling.

We used to be a province with a sound manufacturing industry based on cheap electricity, forestry in Northern Ontario and growing fruit in the Niagara and all of that is

There is an opportunity to elect an NDP government "to get things back on course," he said.

"I want to help to improve the condition of the province of Ontario and form the second NDP government in the province's history."

Abel is a former NDP MPP for the riding of Wentworth North. During his tenure in the Ontario Legislature, he was deputy chief government whip, government caucus personnel committee chairperson, sat as a member of the standing committees on general government, regulations and private bills, finance and economic affairs, estimates and the standing committee on the ombudsman. He is currently employed as the senior licensing officer for the City of Kawartha Lakes.

Doors Open Highlands East well received

448-2018

Wilberforce

Hilda Clark

Doors were opened wide in welcome and a goodly number passed through them. Doors Open in the communities of Highlands East on June 11 and 12 was an event well received and greatly appreciated by those who visited and those who hosted visitors. It was well worth the tremendous preparations made over the past six months and especially the efforts by people at all 20 sites.

A special bus tour two days before the actual event provided site hosts who were available to visit most of the sites. We hope that the experiences visitors had on the weekend were as good as we had on our tour.

We hope those that welcomed visitors into their homes, churches, businesses, museums, etc., have the warm feeling of knowing that the sharing of their special places was a good thing.

For now this tired but contented keen participant in Doors Open Highlands East simply says thank you to all who were involved in any way. Perhaps next week a further report and other news will be forthcoming.
